Formula first equipped its 380 Super Sport Crossover (SSC) with sterndrive propulsion, hoping to cater to loyal customers moving up from smaller sterndrive models like the Formula 350 CVR. But Formula and its exclusive yacht designer, John Adams, had a triple-outboard version of the boat on the drawing board from day one, predicting that in the long run, it would outsell the sterndrive model.

While most of the outboard versions looked identical to the sterndrive, there was no mistaking the primary difference: a trio of throaty Mercury Racing 450R outboards mounted to the transom. When it came to the boat's stepped FAS3TECH hull, however, the new propulsion package posed quite a naval architecture challenge.

The updated deck layout offers a newly designed swim platform sporting wings on either side of the outboards to expand the platform space as much as possible. The boat also has Formula's optional "Swim Platform Sport Station," a padded, arched rail with six drink holders mounted just forward of the outboards. This rail makes a great place to stand and enjoy a beverage while watching the water behind the boat.

The triple-outboard 380 SSC offers several advantages. The space previously used as an engine compartment is now a huge dry stowage locker.

Mercury's Joystick Piloting for Outboards control system made the triple outboard version a dream to dock. The joystick provides 360-degree, fingertip control, allowing you to move the boat forward, aft and sideways with just a push of your fingers.

Manufacturer Provided Description

Filling out the Crossover line, here comes the Formula 380 Super Sport Crossover, a player in the arena that will surpass all others. This 38' in length, 11' 6" beam contender slots in nicely between the 330/350 Crossover Bowriders and the established 400/430 SSC and ASC models. The 380 SSC incorporates FAS3Tech multi-step technology and a molded structural grid to deliver the sure-footed performance that is a Formula hallmark.

No other 38-foot full-cabin bowrider can boast a full-width cockpit experience with true overnight capabilities for four. The Formula Crossover fleet continues to push class expectations as it challenges others to defy compromise.
